Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, in a speech here on Thursday night, said that the United States banks were reaching saturation point in the absorption of Government bonds and simultaneously were refusing private loans.

In the event of a general unloading, he said, bond prices would crash, eliminating the banks' liquid assets and starting uncontrolled inflation with the Government issuing money to support its own securities.

TEMPLE MURDER MAN SUFFOCATED BY GAG

PARTY

A merry night of eating and drinking had a tragic ending at the Tin Ho Chinese temple in the New Territories on Thursday night when Lo Ki, the caretaker, was found yesterday morning by the temple cook, Lo San, bound and gagged in his room. When he was cut free he was found to be dead! The man had apparently been suffocated by the thick bandages around his mouth.

In his report to the police, Lo San said that on the previous night Lo Ki had entertained four friends in his room. After collecting fire-wood the next morning he knocked on the door of Lo Ki's room, but received no answer. Forcing an entrance, he found the caretaker lying on his bed, bound and gagged. He was dead.

The room had been ransacked and was strewn with peanut shells and wine glasses.

Police investigations in the case have resulted in the detaining of five Chinese.

CROAT REFUGEES TRAINED AGAINST YUGOSLAVIA REPRESENTATIONS TO LEAGUE CONSIDERED CERTAIN

Geneva, To-day.

The possibility of strong Yugoslav representations to Hungary is envisaged as the result of a confession made by a Croat, Novak, who was arrested at Thonon in connection with the Marseilles assassinations.

Novak said that his name was really Hospice. He had been sentenced to death during his absence from Yugoslavia for murders, and had sheltered in a refugee camp in Hungary, where he had been trained in terrorist activities. He received a special mission, and went with two other Croats to Zurich, where they joined the Assassin, Kelemen, and another Croat named Shilny.

All five went to Fontainebleau, where they split into two groups, Hospice and two others going to Paris, while Kelemen and Shilny went to Marseilles.

HOSPICE ADMITTED THAT IF HE HAD RECEIVED ORDERS TO EXECUTE KING ALEXANDER HE WOULD NOT HAVE HESITATED TO CARRY THEM OUT.

Yugoslavia is almost sure to bring the matter to the notice of the League of Nations, especially as the Yugoslav Government last April called the attention of the League to the fact that Croat refugees in Hungary had formed an organisation for terrorism in Yugoslavia.

NEW ITALIAN ATTITUDE CAUSES UNEASINESS

UNFRIENDLY TALKS ON WIRELESS

ADRIATIC PORT BEING STRENGTHENED

Belgrade, To-day.

Official quarters here are most uneasy in regard to the attitude of Italy. It is learned that the Yugoslav Government yesterday made representations to Rome in regard to what are considered unfriendly comments contained in Italian broadcasts on the situation in Yugoslavia, where, an Italian broadcast, on Thursday said and suggested, a disruption is imminent.

It is confidently hoped that the matter will be satisfactorily settled.

Meanwhile, however, it is reported that the Italian garrison at the Adriatic port of Zara has been strongly reinforced. This is regarded here as unnecessary and not tending to improve the Italo-Yugoslav relations. It is also firmly believed that the Italians are supporting the Croatian revolutionaries. — Reuter.

WEATHER FORECAST

Fair generally, with moderate east winds, was the weather forecast issued this morning by the Royal Observatory.

It is alleged that the conspirators had three plans. If the Marseilles outrage failed, an attempt was to be made to wreck the Royal train at Lyons. Finally, a pistol and bomb attempt would have been made in Paris. — Reuter.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY FIXED FOR TO-MORROW

London, To-day.

Plans for the start, next Saturday, of the great air race to Australia for Sir MacPherson Robertson's trophy are now being completed at Mildenhall, Suffolk, one of the largest aerodromes in England.

Even the heaviest planes in the race should experience no take-off difficulties for runways of about 1,500 yards are available, and, as the surrounding country is flat, the approaches are excellent.

All of the competitors for the race, which is being organised by the Royal Aero Club in connection with the Melbourne Centenary Celebrations, have not yet arrived in England, but they must assemble by to-morrow when the machines will be weighed and inspected, and a meeting of pilots will be held to discuss the starting arrangements. MR. TANG SHAO-YI

(From Our Own Correspondent)
Canton, To-day.

Mr. Tang Shao-yi, magistrate of Chungshan Model County, has arrived here aboard the river gunboat Chup Shun, from Tong Ka Wan, his county seat, near Macao. The recent mutiny of the county guards, against the Magistrate was suppressed by a regiment of the model division, although during the commotion the people of Chungshan County took advantage of the situation and elected Mr. Chu Chuck-man as magistrate.

While it is uncertain whether Mr. Tang will return to his post in Tong Ka Wan, he will resume his duties at the South-West Political Council of which he is a standing member. Being a member of the Central Supervisory Committee, Mr. Tang is ipso facto a member of the Kuomintang South-West Executive Committee here.

THE INDIAN QUESTION

CHAMBERLAIN
RIDICULES WHITE PAPER DISCUSSION

NEW SITUATION MAY ARISE

Danger Of Advent Of Socialist Govt.

BRIEF MENTION OF ARMS

London, To-day.

Reference to last week's India discussion at the Conservative Conference at Bristol was made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, in a speech to Conservatives at Edgbaston, Birmingham, last night.

He said that it must be remembered that it was quite possible that the final conclusions on India, would be so different from those contained in the White Paper that a new situation would arise. It would, therefore, be premature and absurd to discuss a White Paper when they did not know whether it was going to be a real foundation for final proposals.

He added that Conservatives should reflect that if, in consequence of differences in the Party, the Socialists were allowed to come in, Mr. George Lansbury had stated that they would immediately call a constituent assembly in India and hand over to that body the formation of a constitution for India. Inquest Of New Ideas For Embroidery English Stitches And Japanese Designs Applique In Picture Effect

Women interested in embroidery are always seeking new ideas for this fascinating form of needlework. A study of the advance examples of finished work displayed for the coming winter season will yield abundant inspiration.

London.

The revival of interest in Japanese art is responsible for a fresh type of embroidery which is coming into vogue, in which English stitches and materials are used in a light and charming way in floss silks on a gold or silver crinkled rayon fabric. The embroidery achieves the "crackle" look which is so fashionable in parchment and pottery handicraft work at the present time. The designs are purely Japanese, pagodas, trees laden with cherry blossom, ornate little bridges, smooth blue lakes and fleecy clouds, introduced in decoratively flowing lines, and with, of course, Japanese figures.

This style of embroidery is being used for whole "sets" for both personal use, in the way of lingerie sachets, and for table runners, cheval sets, cushions, and many other articles in the realm of home decoration. Pastel coloured silks are used, and the finished appearance is so light and delicate that this work is harmonious in almost any setting.

Modernist Aspect

In its modernist aspect for important embroideries, wall pictures, panels, and screens, large or small, designs based on colour prints of old Japanese paintings on silk could be well adopted by the artistic woman.

Many of these prints are essentially modern in spirit and colouring, despite their antiquity, and the lines are wonderfully decorative, whether the subject be a single figure or landscape.

As an example there is a print of a picture by a seventeenth century artist of "Nakatsukasa," a famous ancient poetess. This is a kneeling figure, with two-thirds of the background in a beautiful shade of red gold, with a deep rich green and ivory coloured foreground. The graceful robe in soft red and pale jade blue and green has touches of gold; and the sash, in a lighter tone of ivory than the foreground, again with its emblems in gold, gives a decorative and absolutely modern look to this design.

It would be "at home" in the most severe of modernist settings, and the beauty of colour and line would be always a joy to the beholder.

In the lesser world of artistic embroidery the small pictures which give so much pleasure in their working are now applied as well as worked in cross stitch. The well-known "Santa Maria" has the sail-ciphers in crimson linen or silk, in cottage garden scenes the thatch is put on in bright brown linen. This touch adds to the attractiveness of these needlecraft pictures, and lessens the time spent in stitchery. One of the advantages of this type of embroidery is that it is so effective and yet so quickly done.

Applique is also used for vivid splashes in colour in flower subjects, for the blue vase in a group of golden marigolds, or in a flower here and there, if the flowers are large enough to treat in this way.

The gayest of flowers are a feature of Venetian work, another phase of needlework which will attract many women this winter. Here the art of cutting out flower shapes takes the place of fancy stitchery to a large extent. Petals and leaves of brightly coloured, soft felt cloth are posed in designs on a canvas linen in natural colouring.

Applique Work

This is not applique work, since the flowers have to be made up before they are sewn on to the canvas. The main idea is to keep them as flat as possible, and to achieve a striking and harmonious arrangement in the colouring of the superimposed petals. The effect is distinctly modern, and the floral sprays and groups can be used to decorate many articles in home decoration, including sachets, boxes, and cushions, and the ever useful tea cosy.

HIGH COLLAR FOR MINK CAPE

Attractive White Ermine Ties

London.

A lovely cape of mink has a high collar which frames the face like the cup of a flower, the fur of the cape itself being arranged in diagonal lines.

The "tuck" mounting is again used in the treatment of the Russian sable which forms the border of a luxury cape of white ermine. The cleverly crossed collar is also of sable.

For the woman who is in need of a smaller fur wrap to wear with her tailormade suit, there are especially attractive white ermine ties finished with natural black tails for as low a price as nine guineas. If she can go a little higher there are even luxurious two-skin ties of dark natural Russian sable, at prices under the between-season regime lasting only a fortnight longer—starting at twenty-one guineas.

SLEEVES AS AN IMPORTANT POINT IN FASHION

Sleeves are still an important fashion point in any garment, but in size they have considerably diminished. They can be made entirely of knife pleating, or joined in from a yoke to form a drop shoulder. Thirdly, they can be set in with the yoke, looking fairly straight round the top of the arm while they ruckle up attractively at the elbow. A real puff sleeve is out of fashion.

VELVET FOR THE SEASON

Replaces Imitation Fur

London.

Spangles of brown glitter pleasingly on black lame afternoon or cinema dresses. A coppery metal thread is often woven in the fabric. Lame and fabric woven effects are sharing popularity with the metal woven velvets.

It certainly is a velvet season, and velvets are delightfully varied. Some stamped effects remind one of Victorian plushes; these make rich-looking suits. The figured and metal woven velvets will largely take the place of the imitation fur-cloth of a season or so ago.

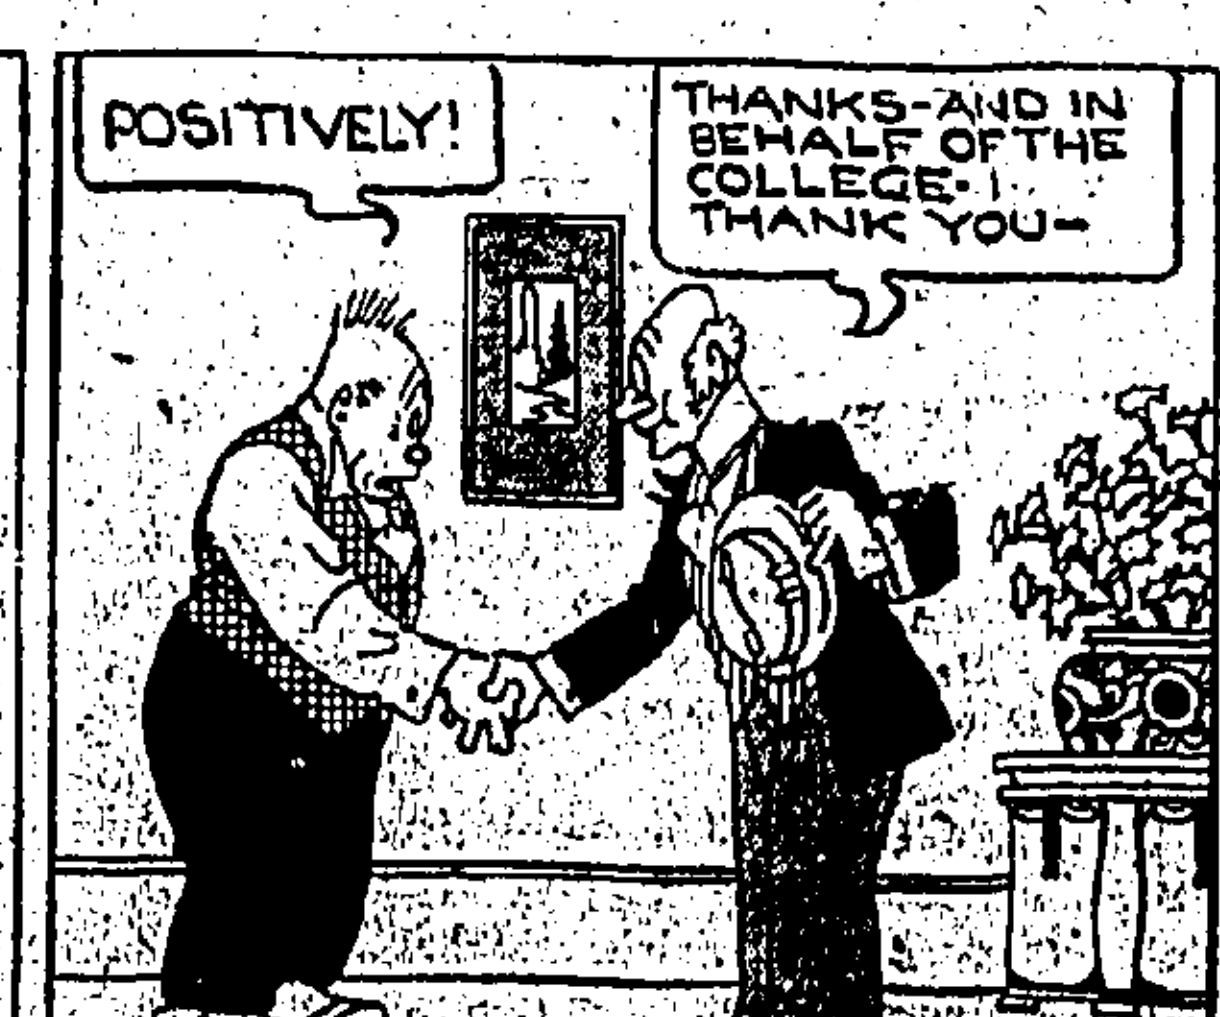

ARMS AND THE WOMAN

Arms that are too thin above the elbow can be rounded by massaging them daily with warmed olive oil (almond oil is just as good if you dislike the smell of the former) and by this simple exercise.

Stand straight, feet apart and steady, then swing the arm round and round, first forward a few times, then backward, tautening, then loosening, the muscles in the arm with each swing.

shown in the schedules exhibited at the General Post Office and Kowloon Office. All letters etc., must be marked "By Air Mail" and handed in at the General Post Office. Unless superscribed for despatch by a special air mail service, correspondence will be forwarded by the first service available.

WOOL AND TWEED STITCHERY

A "Fly-Away" Affair

FOR the early autumn, wool and tweed stitchery, and all drawn-wool and plaited fantasies in cloth, form a practical decoration. For scarves, berets and handbags, the fabric itself is often inserted with a contrasting colour and design, with open-work trellis effects to mark the shaping.

Many smaller berets in tweed show this open-work craze, and are worn with the further decoration of a light chenille-spotted veil, a "fly-away" affair, that is a bold contrast to the solidity of tweed. Attractive effects can be attained by all this stitchery and fine handbraiding in fabric. Darning, and hem-stitching in wool is now as important as similar trimming used to be in linen.

THREE VERY OPEN SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIPS TO-NIGHT

BORDERERS WILL BE EXTENDED BY SOUTH CHINA "B"

Keen Soccer Struggle This Afternoon

CLUB LIKELY TO WIN

Although it is only the third week of League football, the result of today's clash between the champions, the Borderers, and South China "B" at Caroline Hill may go far towards deciding the championship this season.

The Chinese team, who are considered the equal of the "A" Olympic team, have recorded overwhelming victories in their first two matches, and with a forward line including the leading goal-scoring in the League, their chances are bright.

The Borderers, however, have been strengthened by the return of Morrison, and their forwards can now concentrate on scoring goals without any apprehension regarding their defence.

An early lead will probably decide the issue.

The Club are expected to retain their runners-up position in the league, and, reinforced by "Ernie" Strange and "Andy" Duncan, should have no difficulty against the Athletic eleven.

The strong Police combination should penetrate Kowloon's defence, which has been weakened through the absence of Bliss, while the Lincolns should over-run the Club de Recreo eleven at King's Park, as the Portuguese Club are seriously weakened through the loss of A. V. Cosano and N. Helton, two of the best players.

Navy Debut

The Navy make their debut to-morrow, meeting a strong St. Joseph's combination. The Navy team is a very formidable one, and, in spite of a fortnight's practice and alterations in their line-up, the Saints are not expected to hold the sailors.

CHINESE ARMY MAY POPULARISE BASEBALL IN CHINA

ATTEMPT NOW BEING MADE

AWKWARD AT THROWING IN EARLY TRAINING

Peiping.

There is still hope for the popularization of baseball in China. The Chinese army is taking up the American game.

Several afternoons a week, passersby at the American Marine athletic field here are treated to the unusual spectacle of Chinese athletes playing baseball. Hardened American Marines in baseball uniform keep up a running flow of advice, from the sidelines.

The Chinese players are picked athletes from the Thirty-second Chinese army of Peiping. By arrangement between General Shang Chen, the commander, and Colonel P. M. Rixey, commander of the American Legation Guard here, the Chinese soldiers are taking lessons in baseball from members of the crack Marine team.

When the Chinese have become proficient at the game, they will organize teams in their respective companies, and it is expected, naturally, that the popularity of the game will spread.

The Chinese students of baseball have not gone far yet, with their lessons. They are still a little awkward in their throwing. Their batting is wild, and they are inclined to miff the ball with regularity. They are full of enthusiasm, however, and their Marine coaches are confident that most of them will develop into creditable players.

Although baseball was quickly taken up by Japan and has become the national sport of that country, it has made virtually no headway in China except in Shanghai. When baseball is occasionally played, a soft indoor ball is used. In Peiping, the only baseball teams are American and Japanese.

Numerous efforts have been made to popularize baseball in Chinese colleges, but all have failed.

Basketball leads all sports in popularity in China. It is played in all schools and is a favourite form of recreation also in the army. Soccer football also has thousands of followers.—Associated Press.

REASON FOR LOSING AT BASEBALL

Mirrors Allegedly Used By Detroit Crowd

St. Louis, Oct. 5.

"It was a trick. They did it with mirrors." That is the explanation of the Detroit Tigers' victory in the second game of the World Series advanced to-day by Jimmy Collins, slugging first sacker of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Detroit fans, charged Mr. Collins, flashed a mirror in the eyes of the St. Louis batters as they stood at the plate.

"That's why we couldn't hit 'School boy' Rowe," said Mr. Collins naively, yet earnestly. Persistent questioning of Mr. Collins finally disclosed that he was serious.

"Why didn't the Cardinals protest to the umpire?" asked amazed Detroit fans.—United Press.

HOCKEY WIN FOR RECREO

Signals Beaten 2 To 1 In Keen Game

WHITEHEAD SHINES

In a very scrappy, but fast, hockey match on the Marina ground yesterday the Club de Recreo defeated the Royal Corps of Signals by 2 goals to 1.

In the first half the Recreo had most of the play, but only managed to score one goal. A. XAVIER opened the scoring when he cut-in from the left wing to beat C. S. The score remained the same until the interval.

At the beginning of the second half the Signals pressed, and as a result of their repeated attacks MAY scored with a beautiful ground shot which left H. Britto standing.

The Recreo then took up the offensive, and, although they pressed, Cross was never really tested, the backs holding up most of the raids.

After a forward rush from the half way line P. NOLASCO-SILVA received the ball, beat Whitehead, and shot from the circle edge, the ball travelling shoulder-high into the top right-hand corner of the net.

Whitehead, who was playing in Martin's place, at right back, proved himself a very able substitute.

Britto, Remedios and J. J. Remedios; Oliveira, Goncalves and Rodrigues; Olina, Gutierrez, Nolasco-Silva, Rosario and Xavier.

Signals: Cross; Whitehead and Rodgers. Austin, Dilly and Buttery; Higginsbottom, Fielding, May, Erridge and Larkin.

ANOTHER RECORD LIKELY

LAWRENCE'S CHALLENGE TO ROZA-PEREIRA

HALF MILE EVENT MAY PROVIDE NEW MARK

(By G. L.)

UNLIKE THE THREE SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIPS THAT HAVE BEEN WON DURING THE PAST WEEK BY W. LAWRENCE, PRACTICALLY WITHOUT OPPOSITION, THE REMAINING THREE TITLES TO BE DECIDED AT THE V.R.C. GALA TO-NIGHT AT 9.15 P.M., ARE ALL VERY OPEN EVENTS.

The three events are, the 880 Yards free style, the 50 Yards sprint, and the 100 Yards breast-stroke. There are four entries in the half-mile event, four in the sprint race and five entries for the breast-stroke.

Only Edward Roza, the holder, has entered to defend his Colony's diving championship.

Although outclassed in the shorter distances, Lionel Roza, Pereira is at his best in the 880 Yards, and has won this championship for three years in succession.

Contrary to the general belief, Roza-Pereira is swimming better than ever this year, but this fact has been somewhat overlooked owing to the amazing improvement of W. Lawrence and the youthful A. A. da Roza.

Another New Mark?

Roza-Pereira set up his best time to-date in the 440 Yards free style in a race at the C. B. C. last month, recording 5 mins. 40 secs. for the distance, more than 3 secs. better than his championship time. In the 880 yards event during the Interport trial he recorded 11 mins. 58 2/5 secs. one second off the Colony's record, and

VESTMENT WINS AT KIANGWAN

St. Leger Won In Slow Time

Slaving off a challenge at the top of the straight and then finishing comfortably by the official margin of three-quarters of a length ahead of Good as Gold, Vestment won the Kiangwan St. Leger on October 8, ridden by F. Marshall, while Reality ran third.

The start, under the flag, was a little ragged, but little advantage was lost by the ultimate winner, who was kept handily up to the last turn. The time of the race was not netted the only goal for the Radio.

LAWRENCE'S TRIUMPH

WINS HIS THIRD AQUATIC TITLE IN RECORD TIME

AMAZING NEW MARK ACHIEVED

JOHNSTONE'S 440 YARDS TIME BETTERED BY FIVE SECONDS

Koh Wins Long Plunge

(By G. L.)

W. LAWRENCE CONTINUED HIS REMARKABLE SERIES OF RECORD BREAKING FEATS LAST NIGHT WHEN HE WON THE COLONY'S 440 YARDS FREE STYLE CHAMPIONSHIP AT THE V.R.C. IN THE RECORD TIME OF 5 MINS. 27 2/5 SECS., CLIPPING 5 SECONDS OFF J. R. JOHNSTONE'S 1929 RECORD, AND LAST YEAR'S CHAMPIONSHIP TIME BY 21 SECONDS!

Swimming a well-judged race, he took the lead from Lionel Roza-Pereira, the holder, after the tenth length and gradually increased his lead to win by more than half the length of the bath.

This is Lawrence's third Colony's title in three days, all of which were won in record time. He is favoured to break the Colony's record in the 880 yards at to-night's V.R.C. gala.

E. H. Koh won the second championship for the Hong Kong University, plunging 57 feet to beat J. R. Soares, the holder.

A girl's handicap race, won by little Miss Elsie Hunt, and a Members "B" class 75 Yards medley were the only other events on the programme.

Campbell Swims

W. T. Campbell was an additional starter in the quarter mile swim, and kept pace with the three other swimmers, Lawrence, Roza-Pereira and A. A. Roza for 10 of the 18 lengths.

After covering the first 100 yards in 69 secs., the 220 mark in 2 mins. 39 secs., Lawrence forced the pace and went into the lead after the tenth length. Campbell dropped back, but A. A. Roza hung on gallantly. Lawrence increased his lead on each length over Roza-Pereira and on the 14th (Continued on Page 5.)

SHANGHAI'S SMASHING CRICKET TRIUMPH

HOW 13 YEAR OLD GIRL WON GOLF TOTLE

CLASSIC SHORTS BY MISS JUPP

MISS MONTFORD'S DEFEAT

(By GEORGE GREENWOOD)

London, September 15.
To the delight of the crowd, Miss Nancy Jupp, the 13-year-old Scottish player from Longniddry, won the Girls' Championship at Stoke Poges yesterday.

In the final she beat Miss Joan Montford, aged 18, of North Foreland, by 3 to 1.

There was never any doubt about the result, and though Miss Jupp did not play quite so well as on the previous day—not unnatural in view of the bustle and excitement of playing five matches before big galleries—she never lost command of the game.

True, she topped her drive and then a brassie at the first hole, which she lost. But it was of no consequence, for she won three of the next four holes in four figures. From this moment the writing was on the wall, the only matter in suspense being the extent of the victory.

For a child, she played a number of really classic shots, which called forth the admiration of W. B. Torrance and other international golfers who were present.

"Thank goodness I have not to follow that shot," said Torrance as Miss Jupp crashed a brassie on to the fifteenth green (444 yards) and got the simplest of 4's.

This was only one of many brilliant efforts by this clever, confident little girl, who has developed a perfect technique and one of the most fascinating swings I have ever seen.

AMAZING EFFICIENCY

The second hole (360 yards) provided another example of her amazing efficiency—a drive, mashie shot and a putt that you could have blown into the hole. There was another instance at the short third (187 yards)—a spoon shot over the valley to the middle of the green, and a beautifully judged putt to the hole side.

She won the fourth (400 yards) in 4 to become two up. It was all very extraordinary.

However, at the sixth, Miss Jupp came to earth with a bump, taking a 7, but—away she went again with a 3 at the seventh and a 4 at the eighth. A 6 crept in at the ninth, and, out in 42 against 44, Miss Jupp was one up.

Miss Montford's best effort was at the ninth (420 yards), where she had a 4, following two well-hit wooden club shots to the edge of the green. She hung on desperately, losing a hole here and winning another there.

Still, she was unable to make any real impression on her jaunty little opponent.

Miss Jupp's great 4 at the fifteenth was a stunning blow, the finishing touch being applied at the seventeenth (412 yards), where she hit a gorgeous spoon shot across the brook for a 4 and the match.

Miss Jupp's score for the seventeen holes was 77, which, considering everything, can only be regarded as a great achievement.

As the last putt was holed, Miss Montford dashed up to her smiling opponent, and exclaimed: "Bravo! Nancy. Splendid!"

All that Miss Jupp could say was: "I feel dreadfully sorry for Joan because she hasn't got another chance, while I have another five years."

length was about half a length ahead, going strongly. He spurred over the last two lengths to finish well ahead in record time.

Rosa-Perera Challenged

A. A. Rosa then surprised by challenging Lionel Rosa-Perera for second place, spurring to recover every inch of the lost ground. In the final all-out spurt over the last 15 yards, however, he was beaten by the ex-champion. Campbell

HONG HONG'S FOURTH INTERPORT DEFEAT

TAIL AGAIN RESCUES SIDE FROM BIG COLLAPSE

COMPLETE STATISTICS

HONG Kong sustained one of the heaviest defeats in the history of the Interport Cricket series when they bowed to Shanghai by 270 runs yesterday.

As in the first innings, the "tail" once again saved the Colony from a total collapse, the last five wickets adding 43 of the 102 runs scored when 373 were required.

SHANGHAI'S BIGGEST WIN WAS RECORDED IN 1921 WHEN THEY VISITED HONG KONG AND WON BY AN INNINGS AND 153 RUNS. THEY ALSO WON BY AN INNINGS IN 1912 AND 1887.

This year Hong Kong have lost to Shanghai at cricket, lawn bowls, and polo. They also lost the swimming Interport to Tientsin, although beating Shanghai on points. The season's soccer and rugby Interports have yet to be played.

JOE MCCARTHY TO KEEP JOB AS HEAD MAN OF YANKEES

Babe Ruth Not Seeking Manager's Post

OWNER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

New York, Oct. 8.

Joe McCarthy will continue to pilot the New York Yankees, American League club, next year, according to announcement made to-day by Colonel Jake Ruppert, owner of the club.

The announcement was in reply to reports from Detroit that George Herman "Babe" Ruth, the Yankees' Sultan of Swat, was seeking a major league managerial job, preferably with the Yanks.

Commenting on the reports, Colonel Ruppert said:

"I won't have two managers. I am satisfied with McCarthy. This indicated that the Babe, probably the most colourful baseball player ever produced, would have to seek a managerial job elsewhere.

The Bambino, in a statement issued in Detroit, reiterated that he would retire from the game unless he gets a major league managerial job.

The Babe, formerly the highest paid player in the big leagues, was in Detroit closely watching the current world series battle between the Detroit Tigers and the St. Louis Cardinals.

McCarthy, although failing to give the Yanks a pennant this year, succeeded in driving them to a second place position at the end of the season after a close contest with the Tigers for the junior league flag.

In 1932 McCarthy piloted the Yanks to victory in the American League and gave them a world championship. The Yanks defeated the Chicago Cubs, four games straight, in that year.

ENGLAND FAVOURED AT RUGBY

Should Beat Ireland And Wales In International

LACK OF HALF BACKS

England should do well again this season in the international Rugby campaign especially with the advantage of having two home games as against one last season. The Welsh and Irish matches are at Twickenham, the Calcutta Cup match being the only "away" one.

Most of the backs will be available again, if not all, but the outside half position will present the selectors with a difficult problem. W. Elliott, who has filled the position for two years (until last year's final match), is now at sea, and will not be available.

C. Slow, the Leicester and East Midlands player, who took Elliott's place against Scotland, is playing again, and will have B. C. Gadeney, last year's English captain, as his partner. There is a good deal of high-class football in Slow, but he does not always bring it out on the big occasions, and most certainly did not do so in his one game for England last year. He may do better in the trials this year, and so reassure us.

T. J. Barrington, the brilliant, if erratic, Bristol and Somerset outside half (he is captain of Bristol this year), may demand consideration again.

But there are precious few outside halfbacks playing who are anywhere near international class and it may well be that a centre will be tried there, for it so happens that we have quite a number of really good centres. R. A. Gerard, P. Crumner, J. A. Tallent, J. Heaton, J. C. Brookes, and R. Leyland, to name just some of them.

for 102.

M. Barthou

The unfortunate death of M. Louis Barthou, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, brings to an untimely end a career which was of challenging interest to Englishmen, though he was never anything of an Anglophile. There is always a pathos about a career of vivid colour which ends with a mark of interrogation. A man of force and originality, he had reached the opportunity of testing his powers with his policy of what has come to be rather quaintly called "an Eastern Locarno"; and at the moment when the balance he has been shot down through the mere accident of happening to be in the same carriage with a visiting monarch who had come to receive hospitality and to talk business.

The type of barrister-journalist-politician is very much more common in France than in England. Rules of procedure in the Courts give more opportunity to the man who possesses the same rhetorical ability that is useful on the platform; the signed article is the rule rather than the exception, and some men like Clemenceau have entirely built up a great reputation by their signed articles before they have gone into what we call political life at all; the rapid changes of Ministries not only gives more men a chance, but is favourable to the ambitious young barrister, who is willing to act as the mouthpiece of his party and learn the art of administration by practicing it as the head of a Department. The system of small political groups also gives an opening to the man of legal professional training, who can hardly be accused of inconsistency when he joins a new combination in which it would in any case be impossible for him to get more than a share of his own policy. M. Barthou had been Minister of Public Works (twice); of the Interior; of Posts and Telegraphs; and of Justice. He had twice been Prime Minister; but only during the last year, as Foreign Minister, had he become known internationally as a man with a policy of his own and the power to carry it out.

So far as British policy is concerned—for the "Eastern Locarno" is only of indirect interest to us—he has twice been the protagonist in defeating the proposals of our Government very completely, and with an obvious relish. The first occasion was at the Genoa Conference, to which Mr. Lloyd George went with a very distinguished retinue of experts on finance for the purpose of making some rational settlement about German Reparations. The absurd provisions of the Versailles Treaty, which stipulated for payments that would have been beyond the reach of all the Great Powers put together, and even so left the door open for them to be increased, were to be greatly reduced, and other War Debts in proportion. It was M. Barthou that in a very incisive speech not merely slew the scheme but danced on the corpse. Afterwards, merely to save the face of the Conference, a set of admirable resolutions about currency were adopted unanimously, but which were afterwards ignored with equal unanimity. Everyone can see now that the original proposals would have saved German industry, and with it much of European prosperity; all that we have learned in the intervening years is that the rejection of the proposed pacification was not due to any failure to apprehend that they would have the desired result, but to a deliberate rejection of the result as a thing to be desired. Genoa was Mr. Lloyd George's first major defeat, and his reputation never recovered. Another casualty was the belief in International Conferences as a means of getting anything done.

The second occasion was of course the recent Disarmament Conference, the failure of which has left everything worse than it was before. There was a time when the conjuncture of Stresemann as representative of Germany, and Briand of France, something solid might have been achieved; but the moment of opportunity slipped past. The advent of Hitler, with so many militarist declarations behind him, made schemes of Disarmament appear academic; for even if the recent pacificatory speeches are absolutely genuine, all Europe has a feeling that the Führer is liable to go off at a tangent; and nobody is inclined to take chances.

The "Eastern Locarno" negotiation has not been fully disclosed to the public. From the time of the famous speech of Sir Austen Chamberlain at Geneva, the British Government has disclaimed all wish to interfere in the East of Europe; that negotiation would have required the visit of M. Barthou to London. The catch lay in M. Barthou's proposal to include Russia in the "Western Locarno," on conditions at present not known. Whatever might have been acceptable twenty years ago, it is quite certain that with all the information we now have about the decisive events in the crisis of 1914 and the crucial importance of the mobilisation orders issued by the Russian Tsar and the German Kaiser, nothing will ever induce the people of England to

WESTMINSTER WOOLING

Miss Jenny Lee and Mr. Aneurin Bevan, M.P., are Parliament's first matrimonial "pair."

They were members together from 1929 until the General Election of 1931, when Miss Lee was defeated. The Runcimans and the Mosleys were married before they sat together in Parliament.

Other women members have succeeded their husbands. There have been other Parliamentary romances, but not with two members in the principal parts.

Mr. W. S. Morrison, M.P., met his wife in the secretaries room of the House. Mr. Morrison was then private secretary to Sir Thomas Inskip; his wife acted in a similar capacity to Mrs. Hilton Phillips.

Mr. Geoffrey Mander married Miss Grylls, who had been both a political secretary and a Liberal candidate.

AFFINITIES

Miss Lee and Mr. Bevan have much in common. Both are miners' children; both are gifted with fiery, earnest eloquence.

While Miss Lee went out of the Socialist Party with the L.L.P., Mr. Bevan remained in, but at heart he is just as much a Left Winger as she is.

Miss Lee's oratorical style resembles Mr. Maxton's (who dandled her on his knee when she was a baby). She has all his gestures, gently swinging her right arm, by her side as she leans forward; bending her left arm till her fingers touch her shoulder and shooting the arm out in dramatic gesture.

Mr. Bevan is Welsh, ready-witted and fluent.

In their earlier Parliamentary days both were regarded as somewhat precocious.

Miss Lee in her maiden speech lectured the House on the Budget as if she was teaching one of her school classes arithmetic.

Mr. Bevan's most sensational effort was an attack on Mr. Lloyd George on the Coal Bill, which rattled "L.C." to a degree never equalled.

OXFORD'S GLAMOUR IN FOREIGN EYES

SOME MISCONCEPTIONS REMOVED

(By Adolf Schlegel)

The writer of this article has spent two years at Oxford as a German Rhodes Scholar, and is secretary of the Oxford Union Society.

London. Oxford enjoys a good but strange reputation abroad. The name is known to almost every German, certainly to every student, but it is connected with rather vague and undefined ideas.

Everybody knows that there is a boat race between Oxford and Cambridge. Everybody immediately connects the word Oxford with the words "sport" and "gentleman." Most people think of Oxford as being a nice old town where a small number of extremely wealthy and mostly aristocratic young people lead a life of luxury and leisure.

The average German does not think about Oxford's value as an academic institution. Only among those who have some connection with the German universities, or who have more detailed knowledge of England, is Oxford known as one of the greatest centres of learning.

College Discipline

The German student who finds his way to Oxford is at first somewhat overwhelmed by a number of formalities. He has finished school and left home to go to one of the many German university towns, where he has led a free life in which he was in his own master. He took a room wherever he liked, and nobody cared how he spent his time or when he came home in the evening.

In Oxford all this is very different. The undergraduate is looked after by his college, his work is given to him, and he is supervised in many ways.

His freedom is limited, and the young German feels that suddenly he has gone back to his school days. The discipline and the many regulations of a college are most strange to the foreigner, and many may feel that they are unworthy of the earnest young student.

But these things are only outward signs, and once the foreign undergraduate has realised that during the school years not only the learning, but almost the entire education of the young Englishman lies in the hands, not of his parents, but of other people, he will be able to understand them.

No "Hungry" Looks

The key to Oxford's discipline and to the somewhat inferior treatment of people who, after all, are practically grown up, lies in the public school that a university like Oxford can be understood. In a way, it is a continuation of the school.

This impression is strengthened by the fact that, with few exceptions, the undergraduate at Oxford is free from all material troubles. The German student has not seen such thoroughly happy and contented faces since he left school. Oxford does not know the hungry look of the young student who has not had a warm meal for days; Oxford has never seen the man who toils in a workshop all day and sits over his books at night.

A comfortable living, sufficient food, some books, and a fair amount of amusement are essential parts of the life of the Oxford undergraduate. There is also that extreme luxury which has created a reputation for Oxford abroad. But it is soon realised that this is unimportant, while the large number of scholarships, together with the rules about admittance and residence, show that brains and work and not money are the determining factors of the university. The difference, however, between the care-free life of the young man at Oxford and the sorrowful days of the German student is not easily forgotten.

Training For Life

There is another indication that Oxford is the last stage of the school education. The Oxford undergraduate answers the question: "What are you going to do when you have finished here?" in much the same way as the German schoolboy. He will usually say that he has various interests, but that he does not know yet what he is going to do.

While the German university is a place where specialists are being produced, and where people go because they have made up their minds what their profession is going to be, and because they want to be trained for that profession, Oxford is like the upper forms of the German school—a place that prepares the young man for life in general rather than for any particular profession.

The German student visits the university because he wants to become a lawyer, a doctor, an engineer, or a schoolmaster. The English undergraduate goes to Oxford because he wants to get a broader general education either before he enters a profession which has no direct connection with his studies, or sometimes even before he begins to think about his career.

This fact impresses the foreign student a good deal. From the day when he entered his university he had concentrated all his working and thinking around his future profession, he had already felt a lawyer or a doctor; and in Oxford he finds that all these questions are still very distant problems.

Lectures Abroad

While at Oxford the undergraduate decides what he wants to do in later life. His decision is then based on a certain amount of knowledge, and in most cases it will be much better founded than the decision of the schoolboy.

Once understood, this system seems the most admirable start for a successful life; which, unfortunately, will always be reserved only to those whom wealth or eminent scholarship enable to go to Oxford or Cambridge.

The foreigner also realises after some time that he can find in Oxford that type of university education which he has left behind. He can get the education of the expert, and he can get it from men of the highest academic standards.

It is, perhaps, a pity that the high academic qualities, of Oxford are so often forgotten and underestimated. Oxford is clearly divided into a higher school and a university in the Continental sense. They are both of the very first class, but the school is so much more striking, and is so new to the foreign student that that he is apt to overlook the university at first.

The system of teaching also reflects the school and the university. Most lectures do not teach the undergraduate more than what he can get out of books.

CUTLERY AND CROCKERY
 MISSING

Allegations of larceny of crockery and cutlery from the Palace Hotel by an Indian night-watchman, Bikan Singh, were made at the Kowloon Magistrate's yesterday by Mrs. Oxberry, the proprietress of the Hotel. The defendant was also charged with larceny of a pair of gloves, the property of A. Bower, manager of the Hotel, larceny of a gold mounted fountain pen, the property of J. S. Beach, formerly of the Palace Hotel and larceny of a blanket, the property of Lai King, a boy employed at the Hotel. There were alternative charges of receiving on all counts.

Mr. C. D'Almeida Castro, who appeared for the defendant entered a plea of not guilty to all charges. After evidence the case was adjourned until Tuesday afternoon.

NEW LIGHT ON OLD LONDON

How City Once Lost Law Courts Related

"CHRONICLE" DISCOVERED

A dispute about the price of a loaf of beans, supplied for the refreshment of a Bishop's horse, once cost London its law courts. This is revealed in the "Great Chronicle of London," which is now for the first time being transcribed at the Guildhall.

Fleet Street was the scene of the wrangle, and the year was 1392. "There was debate and offery in Fleet Street between the citizens and the servants of the Bishop of Salisbury concerning a horseloaf," runs the official account of the matter.

The unofficial interpretation is that my Lord Bishop had come to London to attend to legal business, and that whatever citizen of London supplied the "horseloaf," had "stuck on the price."

The presence of the law courts at Westminster, it was explained to a representative of the "Morning Post" at the Guildhall, was always regarded as one of London's commercial assets.

It was, therefore, natural that the Bishop should vent his annoyance over the matter of the "horseloaf" by presenting an exaggerated account of the brawl, and at the same time requesting that the "King should change his place."

In this he was joined by the Archbishop of York, the latter doing a good stroke of business for his own town by securing the removal of the law courts thither.

Editor To Be Published

The "Chronicles," which are now being transcribed, lay for two hundred years in the library of the Bromley family at Baginton, Warwickshire, disguised by a misleading title. Only recently rediscovered, they have been presented by Lord Wakefield to the City of London, and are to be published in a limited edition, three hundred copies, of which will be presented to libraries within the British Empire.

The Chronicles, which run to 360 folios, cover the years 1189 to 1512. They are known also to tell of London's gossip about the probable fate of the little Princes in the Tower, of the first English voyage to America, and even of earthquakes and fiery dragons.

There is also a fund of information for students of price changes, the trade of the City, and the wider history of England, especially during the reign of Richard III.

One 1504 entry has special interest at the present time. "The Somyr," it is stated, "was too drye that noo notarye ran fell from Whitantide tyll our Lady Daye the latter in harvest."

Going even further back, it is likely that the Chronicles will provide the fullest version of the "Brut," those strange Welsh stories which tell how Brutus, grandson of Aeneas, came from Italy to England to found a new Troy, and of the whole legendary succession down to King Arthur himself.

SOME 'CONFIDENTIAL PAPERS'

Tobacco Case In Naval Dockyard Car

The discovery of a case of tobacco was described at Portsmouth when Thomas Sebastian Busby, aged 44, of Portchester Road, Portsmouth was fined £28, double duty and double value, for harbouring uncustomed tobacco. Busby, it was stated in evidence, was employed as a driver in the senior naval officers' department at the Royal Dockyard, and when driving he was stopped by a Royal Marine policeman.

"Don't touch it contains confidential papers," said Busby to the policeman, but when the case was opened it was found to contain nineteen perques of naval tobacco, the monthly allowance of nineteen men. It weighed 17lb. and its value was £15s., the single duty being £10 5s. Busby pleaded guilty, but said he did not know what the case contained. It had apparently been left in the car by a passenger.

A pretty wedding was solemnised at Union Church yesterday when Miss C. M. Markham became the bride of Commander J. B. Morpeth, of the Chinese Maritime Customs. The Rev. E. G. Powell officiated.

The bride is from Darlington, England, and she has been in residence in Hoihow and Hanoi for six months. She is the niece of the Commissioner of Customs at Hoihow.

She wore a pretty tulle dress of light orange colour, with a veil to match, and was given away by Mr. E. N. Ensor, Commissioner of Customs in Hong Kong. Mr. R. Wolfenden was best man.

Amongst those present in Church was Mrs. P. B. Joley, the bride's aunt.

Following the ceremony a reception was given at the Hong Kong Hotel. The newly-wedded couple later left for Repulse Bay for their honeymoon.

U.S. RE-FINANCING

LOWER INTEREST RATES The Treasury has announced a call for U.S.$1,370,000,000 worth of Fourth Liberty Bonds for redemption in April.

The call is believed to be another move to secure lower interest rates, and, therefore, before April, it is likely that holders will be offered lower interest securities instead of cash.

The call is interpreted in many quarters as an indication of the Administration's continued confidence in its financial steps.

It is presumed that the call was not decided without the definite assurance that refunding can be accomplished if desired.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company, OCTOBER FINANCES COMPLETED, Washington, Earlier.

The Government has completed the October financial operations, including the conversion of U.S.$1,020,000,000 worth of Fourth Liberty Bonds to lower interest obligations.

The Treasury Secretary, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, is studying

To day's Short Story.

The Doctor

By Dora Mercer

DOCTOR Philip Byrne was scarcely awake, but he shaved and dressed himself with seeming briskness. Mechanically he felt through his vest pockets: thermometer, forceps, surgical scissors. Then the jacket: stethoscope, prescription forms, all were there. Descending the stairs, he entered the living-room where his wife and three small children sat at breakfast.

"Expecting another busy day, Phil?" Mrs. Byrne enquired as the doctor glanced through the correspondence beside his plate.

"Rather," he replied. "But I'll try and get back in time for dinner. Don't wait though."

His wife looked at him with just a little pride in her eyes. "You're becoming very popular," she said, "but it doesn't give us much opportunity to be together, does it?" Smiling, her husband rose and kissed her. "During the day I'm out and at night it's the telephone. Never mind, dear, mustn't grumble. Good-bye!"

Doctor Byrne climbed into his car and started his rounds. There was a tinge of spring in the air, and passing through the park he caught a glimpse of the first golden crocus peeping above the grass.

"A few days in the country would do the wife and kiddies a world of good," he thought before turning his mind to more immediate matters.

His first call was a hard one, hard because there was so little he could do. He sat beside the patient's bed with an air of apparent leisure, for he knew that patients dislike a hurried visit. A trained nurse hovered in the background, her only duty being that of keeping undisturbed the gentle reverie in which the patient wished to die.

OIL DANGER ON OPEN SEA

Grave Warning From Parliamentarian

FISH AND BIRDS MENACED

The contention that modern methods of mechanical propulsion at sea may end in the poisoning of fish and marine birds, with incalculable consequences to human life, was put forward by Mr. Geoffrey Shakespeare, M.P., Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Health, at the Second (Economic) Committee of the League Assembly.

Mr. Shakespeare impressed upon the Committee the damaging effects of oil pollution at sea, involving not only consequences to bathers, but horrible and unnecessary suffering to all varieties of sea birds.

In addition, there is the danger to inshore fisheries.

Great Britain has prevented the contamination of her waters by the Oil in Navigable Waters Act of 1922, but this is not enough since pollution can be caused by oil discharged outside the three-mile limit.

The British Government suggests various methods of dealing with the problem including the compulsory installation of oil separators in all ships. It is claimed that ship-owners can easily recover the cost of the installation of such apparatus by the saving in oil involved.

Those who talk about the Government's proposals constituting the surrender of India, should recollect that the greatest danger of surrender lies not in any Government proposals, but in the possible advent of the power of a Socialist Government.

GREATEST DANGER

Referring to the Government's armaments programme, Mr. Chamberlain said that he hoped that the new expenditure involved would not be great in any one year as to cripple Britain's resources. He added that Great Britain would not relax her efforts to prevent a general building up of the level of armaments.—Reuter.

plans for the possible calling of another U.S.$1,000,000,000 worth of Liberty Bonds for new conversions in April.—United Press, per S. E. Levy and Company.

Doctor Byrne took the wasted wrist between his thumb and fingers. Each day the pulse was a little weaker. The patient turned trusting eyes upon him.

"Do you know, doctor," she said, "when I woke this morning and found myself still here I was just a little disappointed."

The doctor's features softened with sympathy. He knew instinctively what she meant. Her husband had been a surgeon at the hospital he himself had entered as a student. He had admired this great "magician with the knife," as his fellow medicos called him, with an intensity amounting to hero-worship. With such a hero as his goal, Philip Byrne had worked to attain a high position in the medical profession. It was he who had attended the surgeon's fatal injuries when, after leaving an urgent midnight case, a taxi had

MONDAY'S STORY

Monday's story will be "Just One Word," by Sapphira.

He was recalled to the present by his patient's confiding voice.

"I don't quite know what I believe about the future life, Philip," she was saying, "but," and her features lightened with the smile which always appeared when she thought of her husband, "but this I know: I shall soon see 'the doctor'...."

Doctor Byrne drove to the hospital abstractedly. "I wish it didn't affect me so," he thought. "And people think doctors are hard as iron...."

At the hospital he visited all the worst cases, heard the house-surgeon's report on others. Then he went to the out-patients' department.

THERE were not very many cases waiting, but they all took time. Two were fresh cases with obscure symptoms needing careful history-taking; another was a man who wished to hear the respective merits of half a dozen surgeons before deciding which them was sufficiently competent to perform a minor operation. Then came a girl from an office. The pathologist's report showed tuberculosis, and it was Doctor Byrne's duty to tell her so. She must take a year off, doing nothing to over-exert herself. She didn't know how she could manage so long without wages, she confided, but nevertheless she left the consulting-room gamely enough with her head held high.

The doctor stood for a moment or two by the window meditating—wondering what the next case would be. Then, squaring his shoulders, he summoned the patient, and was relieved to discover that this was the last.

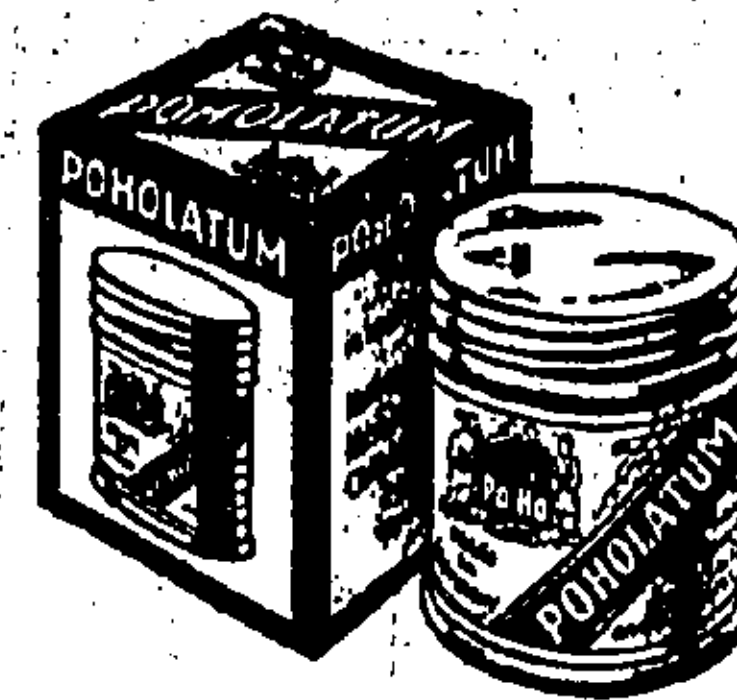

Consulting his list, Doctor Byrne found that there were several telephone appointments to be kept now that the grain of interviewing the silent, still figures from the waiting-room was over. Also, he had to meet a practitioner in consultation. He would only arrive in time by missing lunch! He checked over his equipment again...scarf, bag, stethoscope.

Doctor Byrne was admitted to the house by a maid who bore evidence of recent tears. He smiled as he recognised the doctor who had arranged the consultation dozing in a chair.

Suddenly he started and opened his eyes. "Sorry, Byrne!" he apologised. "I've been up every night for the last ten days. Lots of pneumonia and flu about." Then he proceeded to outline the case. "Only been married six months," he said, "and she contracted double pneumonia. See what you think about her heart. Pity! She's a fine girl and her husband is a splendid fellow. Very much in love and all that. Rotten luck, isn't it?"

Doctor Byrne tried not to notice the wedding presents on the mantelpiece and sideboard; the orange chintz curtains with grotesque green parrots that only one with a keen sense of humour would have chosen.

OXFORD'S GLAMOUR IN FOREIGN EYES

While the German university lecture assumes that the student knows the main literature about the subject, the Oxford lecture does not give him more than what he can find in the books, and is more an introduction to the art of reading them. There are, of course, exceptions. But on the whole one can say that the standard of the Oxford lecture is below that of a German university lecture. It must be, because it is given for a different purpose.

Besides the lectures there are the tutorials. Tutorials for groups of six or eight pupils remind the Continental student of his school, while the smaller groups very often recall the memory of seminars or private conversations with the professors of his university.

There are those tutorials in which, year after year, the same questions are asked, the same answers are given, and the pupils discreetly look at their watches as they did at school; and there are those in which teacher and pupils leave the trodden path and wander to distant problems and to real research.

A great difference between the German university and Oxford is that the German student has got to find his way to his teacher. There is nobody who supervises him or who puts him on the right track. In Oxford he is immediately taken care of by the senior members. It then depends on himself whether he will establish closer contact with the "school" or with the "university," and when he will change from the one to the other.

Union Debates

A question which foreigners very often put is: "Do the undergraduates at Oxford really work?" The answer to this is undoubtedly in the affirmative. As at all other universities in the world, the first months are spent, not so much in working as with acclimatisation and often amusement. But after that time the undergraduate usually works hard.

The average amount of work done by the individual student in Oxford is certainly below that of the German universities, and also of some French ones, but that does not mean that it is not a high average.

There are two more things which strike the German student in Oxford: the debates, in which the undergraduates educate themselves to be useful members of a democracy, and in which they learn political discipline; and the many great and influential men of the country who come and lecture to them or debate with them. Both these factors are certainly great influences over the young men, particularly over those who later in life will take an active part in politics or will reach some other leading position.

Oxford's Own Secret

That is Oxford through foreign eyes. And the products? Young men who are admirably equipped for the tasks which the life of the great British Empire will put before them, and others who become great scholars.

The Oxford man has probably the best general education to be got in the world. Through himself and through the influence he has on people with whom he comes into contact; he is a most valuable asset to society. The German can only get this general education of a high standard if his home can provide it; there is no university where he can acquire it.

His universities can make him an expert or a scholar, but there is no place where he can go for that part of the general education which is so valuable in his later life. It is Oxford's secret.

War between Russia and Japan was again threatened in the crisis arising from the arrest of 88 Soviet citizens employed by the Chinese Eastern Railway by an officer of Manchukuo, the Japanese puppet-state, on charges of sabotage. The arrests followed the failure of M. Constantin Yurenef (left), Soviet Ambassador to Tokyo, and Mr. Roki Hirota (right), Japanese Foreign Minister, to agree upon the terms of the proposed sale of the Russian interest in the railway to the Manchukuoan government. The map shows the location of the road.

CHINESE ART AT BERNE

280 Masterpieces By Modern Artists

EXHIBITION OPENED

Berne. For the first time in the history of Switzerland, an Exhibition of Chinese Paintings, comprising a fine collection of 280 masterpieces by modern artists in Old Cathay, is being held here, in the gorgeous Art Building Kunsthalle, attracting hundreds of visitors daily.

The Exhibition was officially opened to the public on August 25 with a simple but impressive ceremony in the presence of many distinguished guests, among whom were the President of the Confederation of Switzerland and members of the Bundesrat.

In his speech delivered at the opening ceremony the Swiss President lauded the paintings as being masterpieces not only in the Orient but also in the world, further observing that these paintings would be in time to come enjoy a high prestige in the world of art comparable to that as enjoyed by those of Florence and Venice.

The entire twelve rooms in which the pictures are artistically displayed were packed to capacity on the opening day. Each visitor to the Exhibition is provided with a beautifully printed booklet, which, besides explanatory notes to the paintings, contains a lengthy preface by Mr. Liu Hai-shu, renowned Chinese artist of the modern school, and chief supervisor of the Exhibition.

The high degree of admiration on the part of the Swiss people towards these artistic productions was evinced on the opening day by a young Swiss girl student who, besides showing her unbounded appreciation by purchasing on the spot three pictures at high prices, announced that she would come to China shortly to study Chinese painting.—(Central News Agency).

The M.V. "Silversandal," from New York, sailed from Los Angeles on September 17, and is expected here on or about Tuesday.

A cost of $260,000 and will seat 1,500 people, is intended to meet modern needs in a modern way. Every Saturday evening we shall have a first-class concert in the church, during which the latest instructional or religious film will be shown.

DANCING MAN ON CHURCH SPIRE

Courageous Rescue By Two Policemen

LUNATIC RESCUED

A crowd in Baldwin Street, one of Bristol's main thoroughfares, last month watched a remarkable scene on the spire of St. Nicholas' Church, 120 feet above ground.

The spire is enclosed in scaffolding erected for the repair of the weathercock, and the workmen had left when a man was seen to climb the lower platforms. Before anyone could stop him, he had reached the top, and there he threw up his hands and danced wildly around the spire.

Mr. H. Smith, of Devon Road, Whitehall, Bristol, who was watching, stated: "It was an awful sight. Every minute we expected him to miss his foothold on the narrow ledge and come crashing down."

The man was rescued by a feat of bravery on the part of Police Constables Waller and Mislis. They climbed up and carried him down, one holding his arms and the other his legs. Had he struggled on the connecting ladders all three would have fallen to their death.

"We held our breath until at last the party had reached the ground," added Mr. Smith.

The man was taken to the Central Police Station, and later was sent to a mental institution for medical examination.

The "American Liberty League," the first formidable organized opposition to the radical policies of the "Roosevelt Revolution," is canvassing for recruits under the leadership of J. P. Morgan, executive director of the Democratic National Committee during 1932 campaign. He has enlisted such notables of both old parties as John W. Davis and Alfred E. Smith, Democratic presidential nominees in 1920 and 1928, respectively; Nathan L. Miller, Republican ex-governor of New York; James W. Wadsworth, Republican ex-senator and present congressman from New York; and Irene Dupont, Delaware industrialist. Miller now is attorney for steel industry; Davis is Mr. J. P. Morgan's lawyer.

There was nothing to say to the patient. She must not talk, but her eyes watched the doctors with a silent question as they listened to her laboured breathing and quickened heartbeat. The pretty bedroom with all its comforts meant little to anyone now.

When the two men finally descended the stairs her husband was waiting in the hall, pitifully composed, trying to do the properly appreciative thing. He pretended to hunt for cigarettes while waiting to hear Doctor Byrne's report.

THERE was not much he could say—just the final recourse to time, the war between the patient's constitution and the infection.

"Your doctor is doing all he can for your wife. You couldn't have her in better hands," sympathised Doctor Byrne.

"Yes, I know," responded the boy. "I am very grateful." He gulped, and had to shake hands in silence.

"Too bad, isn't it?" said Doctor Byrne at the gate.

"Makes you sick!" exclaimed the other, turning towards his car.

Driving back to town, Doctor Byrne composed himself for his next call. Cheerfulness was the note he must strike here.

Strange, the different things people expected of a doctor.

At a large house in one of the fashionable squares, the butler greeted him with a beaming countenance. He, too, appeared to appreciate these cheerful notes.

"Yes, sir, as he took the doctor's coat, 'a decided feeling of spring in the air. And her ladyship would like to speak to you when you have seen his lordship.'"

The call itself was simple enough. Ten minutes' conversation with the patient—must, the stock exchange, the merits of spring, then he was escorted to the room wherein sat her ladyship, busy over the rudiments of some charity exhibition.

"It doesn't appear to be tiring you very much, does it?" remarked the doctor. "Really, you are wonderful, and after all the strain of illness, too."

THE lines about her ladyship's mouth eased a little.

"I am standing it very well, much better than I expected; but it is very inconvenient to have illness in the house. The nurses interfere with things so, and help themselves to the bed-linen without consulting the house-keeper."

She was comfortably plaintive. The doctor repressed a smile while listening to a lengthy discourse on the difficulties of house-keeping with seven maids, a butler, a footman—and illness in the house!

Doctor Byrne found his next patient, middle-aged, overweight, jolly and indolent in an armchair by the window. He entertained her for half an hour by listening to her views on taxes and tariffs. As she talked, he saw that the street lamps were alight. This consultation had taken so long he could not possibly get home for dinner.

The next call was one he always enjoyed, not so much because his position in this family was expressed by his photograph being placed opposite that of the vicar, but because the results he was getting were so satisfactory. It had all been so simple to Doctor Byrne: the strict diet, the frequent tests, and the invalid wife once again restored to a fairly active life. But to the family it was a miracle.

The husband, just returned from work, beamed on him. In this little home nothing was too good for the doctor. He would have some tea? And some toast? These were home-made cakes. How was his wife? Were the children well?

With a child on each knee, Doctor Byrne ate his meal and thought how good it was to know that one had accomplished something, and that someone knew it. If the practice of medicine could only be always like this!

Two more calls after this, and then the last of the day must be upon the first of that morning. He spent nearly an hour at her bedside.

"I know I shall have a good night now, doctor," she said appreciatively as he finally rose to go.

About nine o'clock Doctor Byrne inserted the key in the door of his home and entered the room where his wife sat dozing by the fire, some unfinished darning in her lap.

As he bent and kissed her she awoke. "Did you get tied of waiting, dear?"

She smiled up at him. "I'm so glad you're back, the kiddies hate going to bed without saying 'good-night' to daddy!"

DOCTOR Byrne laughed. He soon had a pipe going and was stretched out on the settee. "I saw a beautiful room to-day," he said. "Greyish walls, black and white floor, and rose curtains."

"We'll have one like it some day," he said. "And in the meantime," remarked his wife, "what about dinner?"

He looked perplexed for a moment. "Dinner? Oh, yes, I had some tea with one of my patients."

But his wife was already on her way to the kitchen.

Up in their bedroom he paused in the act of removing his collar and placed his arm around his wife.

"I'm sorry I'm so dull, dear," he said, "but I'm no good to-night. In a year or two, however, we shall be able to take six weeks' holiday every year, and then we'll have some fun."

His eyes were tired, but there was for a moment the same boyish expressions that had so charmed her ten years before. For reply she said: "Do you still want little Phil to be a doctor?"

"Yes, of course, if he wants to," replied her husband. "He will be old enough to start when I'm sixty."

"Oh, nothing," said his wife. (The End)

ARMY UNIFORM EXPERIMENTS

"Soldier Now Like A Cheap Hiker"

TAILOR'S CRITICISMS

The British soldier wearing the experimental uniform of the Army was likened to a "cheap hiker" in holiday season by Mr. R. H. Stone, the retiring president, at the conference of the National Federation of Merchant Tailors, at Buxton.

Were they to stand idly by, he asked, and see soldiers dressed in that way? Could such a dress engender discipline and smartness?

It would certainly not improve the soldier's ideas of dress when in mufti or later when he retired.

Mr. Stone spoke of general slovenliness of dress worn at the present time, and pleaded for "clothes consciousness."

Mr. E. W. Meggitt, the new president, spoke of the future of the high-class bespoke tailoring trade.

"Some people point to the great multiple shops and the popularity of ready-made clothes," he said. "Mass production is a fine thing, and I have no objection to cheap clothes for those who cannot afford any better, but mass production is for the multitude, and can never have a personal and intimate association with the wearer which men of discernment and taste require even in these days."

"For that strange conception of dress for men which began as Oxford bags may Oxford be forgiven. It has now developed into the ubiquitous sports coat and flannel trousers—in these days the supreme fashion for every occasion in Anticosti and East-end of every town generally—and which can be had at any price and in all the checks of all the clans of Scotland and elsewhere."

Mr. Meggitt deplored the wide use of the word "tailored" in describing high-class productions. They heard not only of tailored shirts, frocks and corsets, but even of tailored nightgowns. (Loud laughter.)

politics, and he never mentioned money, the topic as indicated by the Senator in a subsequent interview.

Senator Lewis yesterday said:
"There is no cause to fear that the President will embark immediately on further devaluation or any form of inflation.—United Press, per S.
E. Levy and Company.
